MSIC Process Wins Top Award

1-Stop's on-line Maritime Security Identification Card (MSIC) application and induction applications has won the Australian Institute of Training Development's (AITD) annual business strategy award.

AITD is Australia's leading organization for Training, L&D, HR Professionals and those with an active interest in Learning and Human Resource Development. The award was presented at the Institute's gala dinner, held during last week's two-day conference attended by 280 industry professionals.

This is the second award for the 1-Stop's MSIC program who last year won the Lloyd's List DCN "Information Technology award for this system.

The system is being used to train maritime industry participants in Maritime Security regulations and requirements as part of the process in obtaining an MSIC which allows them access to wharf security zones. The system is also being used by Australia's two biggest stevedores to train employees and contractors in workplace health and safety.

"In conjunction with our technology partner, Global Vision Media, a leading training and communications company, we were able to deliver a training management system which complies with legislative requirements, is more efficient than face-to-face delivery, is effective for people for whom online training is often considered unachievable, and has since been expanded to provide site induction", said 1-Stop's CEO, Peter Kosmina.

"Winning this award is further proof of our commitment to innovative solutions for the trade and transport industry" said Kosmina.

The system, which is powerful and flexible, can be used at any site where a training and induction process is required for facilitating entry into that site..
